chain of unexplained deaths suggests that Death Notes are being used once more. Interpol assigns L's biological successor, Ryuzaki, to the newly established "Death Note Task Force", led by Detective Tsukuru Mishima. They quickly secure a notebook during a killing spree in Shibuya, after its owner, Sakura Aoi, is killed. Upon touching Aoi's notebook, the Task Force meets and questions its original owner - a Shinigami named Beppo - who reveals that there are six Death Notes currently in the human world; this is the maximum number that can exist there at any one time. The Task Force resolves to find the remaining five Death Notes. Similarly, Aoi's killer - cyber-terrorist Yuki Shien vows to acquire all the notebooks, believing he is on a mission from Light via his Shinigami, Ryuk. Inciting global panic with a virus featuring a video of Light as Kira, Shien then makes contact with his, Shien asks Misa to disclose information which he believes will reveal where Light is hiding; she refuses, having watched Light seemingly die ten years ago. Undaunted, Shien uses his exceptional hacking abilities to locate three Death Notes, killing their owners in the process. He then impersonates Kira via another virus, threatening a killing spree unless L's successor reveals his name and face. In response, Ryuzaki spreads a CGI video of the original L, inviting Kira to a website intended to trick him into revealing this, Shien escapes before killing one of the original Kira investigation. never use one. Upon leaving, Mishima is arrested on suspicion of compromising the investigation. A year prior, Mishima was tasked with locating Light's son and Mikami had subsequently vanished, leading the police to suspect Mishima of conspiring with Kira. After Mishima is interrogated, Ryuzaki at the National Arts Centre, Shien again asks Misa for her help, which she reluctantly gives. After three Task Force members return to the case, they head with Ryuzaki to meet Shien, who has been lured with the promise that Ryuzaki will reveal his face and the team's Death Notes. Mishima remains at headquarters to instruct them - however, contact is cut by a jamming signal made by Shien. Forced to reveal their faces, Three Task Force members are killed by Misa, who has acquired "Shinigami Eyes" (Which display a person's real name and lifespan above their head). Misa then gives Shien the information he needs but warns him that Light is dead; his name did not appear when she looked at her picture of him. After leaving Misa writes her name on a page of the death note, killing herself. Realizing that the Kira who gave him his task is an impostor, Shien arrives at the secret location and sacrifices half of his life span to obtain Shinigami Eyes - deciding to kill the impostor and take his place as Neo Kira. Shien is then shocked to be confronted by Mishima and Ryuzaki; the latter suspects' Neo Kira wrote his name much earlier and specified a time of death. Ryuzaki then reveals that he believes Mishima is Neo Kira - and upon touching Shien's Death Note, Mishima remembers everything. Having witnessed Teru Mikami turn insane and murder Hikari Yagami, Mishima later gave up ownership of his notebook and instructed Ryuk to give it to Shien, confident that the cyber-terrorist would find the remaining Death Notes. With this new information, Shien attempts to kill Mishima, but the police arrive with orders to kill Mishima, but the police arrive with orders to kill Mishima the Death Notes, allowing him and Ryuzaki to escape through an abandoned subway. They are then confronted by the last remaining Task Force member, who is killed by Arma when she attempts to shoot Mishima and Ryuzaki's despair as he and Mishima is taken into custody. Ryuk then explains why the six Death Notes were dropped down to earth - the dying Shinigami King, intrigued by Light Yagami, has promised to give his throne to the Shinigami who finds the next Kira. When Mishima points out that all six Death Notes have been secured, Ryuk suggests that human greed will result in their use once again, and leaves. Shortly after being led to his cell, Mishima is greeted by Ryuzaki, who informs him that the vehicle containing the notebooks was attacked by terrorists, resulting in four notebooks being destroyed and the other two missing. Revealing that today is his appointed date of death, Ryuzaki suggests trading places with Mishima, as he believes that the latter is the only one who can retrieve the missing Death Notes. Accepting his new role, Mishima reveals his real name - Ryo Nakagami - and leaves Ryuzaki to die peacefully in the cell. A post-credit scene shows a video of Light saying "Just as I planned" and ironically smiling. name, performing his first kill. Light Up the New World however has ambitions greater than documenting the moral quandaries and transformation of a person who suddenly finds himself with the power to anonymously wipe out anybody from the face of the Earth. Its predecessors, Shusuke Kanekos Death Note (2006) and Death Note: The Last Name (2006) have already done that, detailing how Light Yagami turns from a taciturn student into a god and idol by using his newfound powers to rid the world of evildoers. Those films, diligently adapted from the 2003 manga and anime series that followed it, provoked in its exploration of the dangers of humanitys weaknesses in the face of being granted gargantuan powers. They are steadfast in containing themselves within the rivalry between Light and the genius detective tasked to unravel his identity. This is all good, except that when the films ended, questions remain. What exactly has happened to the rest of the world given that the existence of a death note opens up new possibilities?
Answering questionsLight Up the New World seems to place itself in that position to answer that question, to give light to the bigger picture that is outside the riveting competition between the previous films main characters. Sato imagines the post-Death Note world as a mirror image of present-day realities, where criminality has been overtaken by concerns regarding terrorism and world peace. His stakes are higher, proposing that the death notes as keys in a fight for world order. There is one sequence early in the film that is haunting in a series of unexpected deaths within her vicinity. What is particularly striking about the sequence is how her actions cause panic, turning the public space into a spectacle of car crashes and stampedes. Its a portrait of terrorism, yet well within the mechanics of the films fantasies. Sadly, Light Up the New World would again keep its real-world perspectives in the background, as it copies its predecessors knack for puzzles and reveals. The film essentially follows a group of investigators led by Ryuzaki (Sosuke Ikematsu), the inheritor of the DNA of Lights rival L, who are tasked to recover the 6 death notes that are being used in a series of worldwide killings that are somewhat related to establishing a new world order bereft of terrorism. It again navigates itself around a convoluted plot where the rules of the death notes are used to create excitement out of a series of deductions eventually leading to a very familiar plot twist. Updating the discourse its lime to make sense out of the various threads it attempts to weave together, it still manages to churn out sequences whose surprising conclusions do not feel too conveniently just more of the same, except that the setting apes current events, somewhat updating its always thoroughly engaging discourse. Rappler.com FrancisJoseph Cruz litigates for a living and writes about cinema for fun. The first Filipino movie he saw in the theaters was Carlo J.
