When the fifteen -year -old student Rachel Barber does not leave the tram to meet her father, Elizabeth, her mother and Mike, her father, at work. It is the fear of each parent: the son does not come home when he should. When the fifteen -year -old student Russell Barber lost the opportunity to release the tram this film the first time I saw him. This film is an enigma. In the second vision, I think it's not bad at all. I don't know why it's obvious. Could this be because the first view of the film makes you angry with stolen innocence and drawn forever? It is a natural reaction that you get when you look at it, but the final blow gives you the impression that its creators did not agree or were too busy to be betrayed, respecting the two families, to eliminate the end of his intrinsic power. You will have to see this film to find out. I end with this point. Dear filmmakers, choose a group. This is not one of those stories in which you can have both sides. Miranda Otto is an extraordinary performance, but the whole family of the eight is incredibly talented, so unfair that his clan should be a genius to act. His clan and, as he usually said, does not disappoint. Guy Pearce is solid and the young actors in this film are just as fantastic. A bloody police film based on a true story that you will not forget soon.
