Melissa was a vision in lilacmadame was a vision in black velvet (Oxford Dictionaries)She was a vision in white lace. (OALD)she was a vision in that dress (M-W) Does that mean that lilac/black velvet/white lace etc. make those persons a vision, or are they visions themselves with the clothings being just supplementary?Thanks. Hi. Vik Any female can be a 'vision', no matter the colour of her dress, provided she looks beautiful and, if you like, almost 'ethereal'. It's meaning 5 in the WR dictionary.a scene, person, etc., of extraordinary beauty: a vision of loveliness. So, Melissa was a vision (of loveliness) in lilac.Like many other expressions, it can also be used ironically. Melissa was a vision in lilacmadame was a vision in black velvet (Oxford Dictionaries)She was a vision in white lace. (OALD)she was a vision in that dress (M-W) Does that mean that lilac/black velvet/white lace etc. make those persons a vision, or are they visions themselves with the clothings being just supplementary?Thanks. Madame is "enhanced" by the clothes and colours. GF.. I suspect an interesting thread. Or maybe not... One question:She was a vision in white laceis more like:She looked beautiful in white laceorShe was a beautiful woman in white lace? She was a beautiful woman in white lace. When I was starting the thread I was almost sure it's the former.. Yes, so was I... I think I still am"She was a vision in blue lace" can mean either, "She looked delightful when she was in blue lace" or "She was [a blue-laced vision]" Definition of 'vision', WR dictionary - a scene, person, etc., of extraordinary beauty: I think that version is covered by "She was [a blue-laced vision]" Then there is this one: "She looked delightful when she was in blue lace"
