PTE Reading Format and Types of Questions Though reading comprehension is the main focus, some tasks also test your writing ability to fulfill PTE's objective as an integrated exam. Below are some common questions you must complete in a PTE reading test: Fill In The Blanks (Reading/Writing) This task presents several sentences or paragraphs, each containing more than one gap. You must find suitable words that fit seamlessly into the context while aligning with the overall meaning. Fill In The Blanks (Reading) The PTE reading fill in the blanks task has a passage with multiple gaps displayed on the computer screen, with a set of words provided right beneath. You must select and drag each chosen word from this set into the blank while ensuring they logically and contextually fit in. Answer Multiple-Choice Questions (More than one correct answer) The PTE multiple choice multiple answer task requires students to select the correct response(s) from a list of given options after reading a passage. There are several points within the text where more than one answer is accurate according to the information presented; you must scan the passage thoroughly to identify all of them. Answer Multiple-Choice Questions (Single answer) With this PTE reading multiple choice single answer task, you are prompted to answer multiple-choice questions based on your understanding of the content/tone of the given text. While there might be more than one answer that can fit in, you must single out the best response that corresponds with all aspects of the text's interpretation. Candidates arrange randomly ordered sentences (usually placed on the left side of the computer screen) into the correct consequence on the right. The result must form a cohesive, meaningful structure supporting the proper flow of information or narrative. Consider using elimination rules to narrow the options faster if it is a single-answer question. 65% of answers are spotted in the paragraph's first/last two sentences. During your PTE reading practice, learn as much new vocabulary as possible. Do not forget their antonyms and synonyms as well. Note down repeated words. Single-answer questions are marked based solely on the correct/incorrect rule, so you should not leave any blank. On the other hand, multiple-answer ones have a negative marking rule (meaning you will lose points for wrong answers), so it would be better to skip questions you are unsure about. For PTE Reorder Paragraphs Search for the main idea and headline to arrange the paragraphs/sentences. Sentences with pronouns like "she," "they," "I," "we," "those," "us," or "them" are never placed at the beginning. Check out additional phrases ("besides," "furthermore," moreover," "also,") and contradictory words ("although," "but," "however"). For Gap Filling Do not leave any questions blank since this task does not have negative markings/point reductions. Pay more attention to the immediate parts after and before each incomplete sentence to grasp its context. You can usually find synonyms of the missing words in the passage. Vocabulary building is mportant to perform well in gap-filling tasks, so take time to learn new words on a daily basis. 3 Extra Tips to Keep In Mind Improve Your PTE Reading Time Management The average PTE reading time is approximately 30 to 40 minutes with five tasks, meaning you should not spend more than two minutes on each guestion. Try to improve reading speed to 220 words a minute during practice. It is also advisable to concentrate on chunks (groups of words) at a time rather than each separate word. Double-Check Every Answer Even when you finish the test with plenty of remaining time, double-checking each answer is necessary to reduce common spelling/grammar errors or misinterpretations. Studies reveal that 60% of deadly mistakes in PTE tests could have been avoided if candidates reviewed their answers at least twice before submission. There's bad news for parents who frequently plop their kids in front of the TV to give themselves a break: It might end up leaving moms and dads more stressed. Why? Because the more television that kids watch, the more they're exposed to advertising messages. The more advertising they see, the more likely they are to insist on purchasing items when they go with their parents to the store and perhaps make a fuss if told "no." All that, researchers say, may contribute to parents' overall stress levels, well beyond a single shopping trip. The findings come from a University of Arizona-led study, published in the International Journal of Advertising, that explores the potential effects of children's television-watching habits on their parents' stress levels. "The more advertising children see, the more they ask for things and the more conflict is generated," said lead study author Matthew Lapierre, an assistant professor in the UArizona Department of Communication in the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences. "What we haven't looked at before is what the potential effect is on parents. We know kids ask for things, and we know it leads to conflict, but we wanted to ask the next question: Could this be contributing to parents' overall stress?" The study suggests that it could. There are a few things parents can do, perhaps the most obvious of which is limiting screen time. Children's habit of watching TV has a potential impact on parents, putting their children in front of the TV tends to make them happy. Parents can reduce their stress by limiting their children to watching TV.Children will ask for more things when they watch more ads, which can lead to more conflict. Answer: A, D, E2. Drugs we take can weaken our bones and so can ageing, and scientists working to prevent both have some of the first evidence that the best target may not be the logical one. They are finding that in ageing bone, the mineralocorticoid receptor, better known for its role in blood pressure regulation, is a key factor in bone health, says Dr. Meghan E. McGee-Lawrence, biomedical engineer in the Department of Cellular Biology and Anatomy at the Medical College of Georgia. And drugs that block the receptor, like the hypertension medications spironolactone and eplerenone, may help protect bone cells.Drugs like prednisone are glucocorticoids, which are better known for their roles in reducing inflammation and suppressing the immune response, which is why they work so well for problems like irritable bowel syndrome and arthritis. But, like ageing, they can also disrupt the healthy, ongoing dynamic of bone being made and being destroyed. Our natural glucocorticoid receptors. Glucocorticoid scan coax stem cells to make bone-forming osteoblasts, but it also causes those osteoblasts to store more fat, and too much fat in the bone, like anywhere in our body, is probably not good and typically correlates with bone loss. So reducing the impact of glucocorticoid receptors seemed like a logical way to protect bone. Which of the following statements is true? A. Ageing can weaken our bones. B. Glucocorticoids work so badly for arthritis. C. Bone cells may be protected by drugs that block receptors. D. Augmenting the effect of glucocorticoid receptors must be a reasonable way to protect bone. E. When we are young, there are fewer mineralocorticoid receptors in the brain than glucocorticoid receptors. Answer: B, C, A, DAlthough a few plants and animals can make do with salt water, all humans need a constant supply of fresh water if they are to stay fit and healthy. Everybody needs fresh water. Without water, people, animals, and plants cannot live. Of the total supply of water on Earth, only about 3 per cent of it is fresh, and most of that is stored as ice and snow at the poles or is so deep under the surface of the Earth that we cannot get to it.
