"Miss Lucy had a steamboat." She redirects here. For the school rhyme with a similar name, see Miss Lucy had a baby. "Miss Susie had a steamboat," also known as "Operator", [1] "Miss Suzy", "Miss Lucy", and many other names, [8] is the name of a rhyme school American in which each one takes verse to a rude word or profanity that is revealed in the next verse as part of a word or innocuous phrase. Originally used as a jump rope rhyme, now is more sung alone or as part of a palette game. [9] The hand signs sometimes accompany the music, such as pulling the bell on the first verse or making a phone gesture in the second. This song is sometimes combined or confused with "Miss Lucy had a baby", who is sung with the same melody and also served as a junk rope song. This music developed from verses of much older (and Cruder) more commonly known as "Bang Bang Rosie" in Grand -bretan "," Bang Away Lulu "in Appalachia, [10] and" My Lula Gal "in the West. [11] The variants, including a woman with an allure bag ©, instigating the baby's mother to vote to have been seen as a reference to Susan B. Anthony, a US Shragette and wife, [12] and can be responsible â €
