clinical review reasoning health professions 1. Lord B. clinical reasoning in health professions, 2nd edition. Austrian Journal of the Paramedicine [Internet]. 2003Oct.6 [quoted 2021Nov.20];1(3). Available from: Abattose decisions regarding early and effective delivery of prehospital care depend on the " Clinical Reason", a capacity that integrates extensive clinical experience and domain-specific knowledge to support the collection and evaluation of clinical data, and the synthesis of information to guide patient management decisions. In contrast to healthcare centred within an institution where decisions can be supported by an expert opinion, access to medical records and advanced diagnostic tests, patient care in prehospital domain usually requires independent and critical decision-making over time in an environment where similar support is not available or incomplete. As a result, healthy and reliable thinking and decision-making skills are fundamental to prehospital practice. ^ ^ ^
