Justification of the tendency of the population of red list category: Increased extension of occurrence (Reproduction / Resident): 4,630,000 km2 Endanical country: No ash flycatchers are Members of your genre (Myiarchus). They have brown coasts, gray wing bars, gray bakery pallids and throats, yellow pale bellies and black legs and feet. Your tail is long and colorful rust, with dark tips. They have a small crest of feathers in their crown and a small narrow bill. The male and female flycatchers seem equal, although men tend to be slightly larger. The juveniles are more pale and have a rede tail, but otherwise they are similar to adults. Ash flycatchers are confused with other members of the genre (Myiarchus), although they are the most convenient members of the group. They are very similar in color and size for nutting flycatchers, and also are confectionery in crest fly and crest crest. Nutting flycatchers are somewhat smaller, but they seem almost identical to ashes flycatchers and are usually counted by their music. Crest and Crested-Crested Flycatchers are larger and have longer beads, and unlike ashes flycatchers, crest flycatchers have a yellow belly.
