Drawing with Pen and Ink. History In communication Drawing is one of the oldest forms of human expression, with evidence for its existence preceding that of written communication.[5] It is believed that drawing was used as a specialised form of communication before the invention of the written language,[5][6] demonstrated by the production of cave and rock paintings around 30,000 years ago (Art of the Upper Paleolithic).[7] These drawings, known as pictograms, depicted objects and abstract concepts.[8] The sketches and paintings produced by Neolithic times were eventually stylised and simplified in to symbol systems (proto-writing) and eventually into early writing systems. Rembrandt: The Painter at Work. Another technique is subtractive drawing in which the drawing surface is covered with graphite or charcoal and then erased to make the image.[30] Tone A pencil portrait by Henry Macbeth-Raeburn, with hatching and shading (1909) Shading is the technique of varying the tonal values on the paper to represent the shade of the material as well as the placement of the shadows. Exploring Drawing the Barberini Faun in MunichIndividuals display differences in their ability to produce visually accurate drawings. [33] A visually accurate drawing is described as a particular object at a particular time and in a particular space, rendered with little addition of visual detail that can not be seen in the object represented or with little deletion of visual detail".[34] Investigative studies have aimed to explain the reasons why some individuals draw better than others.
