Originally Published: February 26, 2020 Enjoy the best stories, and jokes sent directly to your inbox! If you had to rate yourself for success, what would you focus on? As an entrepreneur Derek Sivers Sivers We all judge ourselves for different measures. In New York City, there are dozens of buildings that say Trump in them. While driving about an hour in the field, I even saw a Donald J Trump park. He made me wonder if they qualify for how many valuable properties they bear the name of it. Many real estate magnates have made billions without putting their name on everything, but maybe that is its measure. Then I thought of how we all classified us according to different measures. For some people, it is as simple as how much money they earn. When your net worth is rising, you know they are doing well. For others, it is the amount of money they give. For some people, it is the number of people who can influence other people's lives. For others, it is the depth with which they can influence the lives of a few people. For me, it is the amount of useful things that I think. A «Things» can be songs, companies, articles, websites or anything else you have created. But doing something useful that my creative contribution does not interest me. And if I think something that is not useful for anyone, does not count. I asked some friends, à € osHow do you rate yourself? »Pilar, a teacher, said: A« How many I'm Directing in a positive direction. " Changing, now that you have a family.) Ariel Hyatt said: «How much my work affects and resonates with people. And how many great moments full of joy I have spent with people in my life. It's a difference I've done in their lives. My business measure is how much impact I have made for my clients and their clients. I qualify that for the improved percentage. ». Tim Ferriss said, à € both of the same As many people, I help overcome fears. My Acquisition Rate of Skills. I ... I ... Have at least two measurements, but not too many, to diversify your identity, just as you would diversify a portfolio to collect against risk. If one of your metrics takes a nose dip due to factors beyond your control, you want a balance metric to progress and save you from depression". Interesting! What about you? It's tempting to say, "how happy I am. "But like Einstein", everything should be made as simple as possible, but not simpler". For this question, I believe that happiness is the end result of living in line with your measure, or grade it well. So I am interested in step 2 to last: the measure where the positive result is happiness. What is that measure, for you? What are the common threads that run through your activities in life? How many places does he visit? How many people can you? Does he call friends? How much do you weigh? How long do you spend laughing? How long do you live? How do you score? | Sivers.orgderek Sivers is an entrepreneur, programmer, musician and creator of Baby CD. His latest book is anything you want.
