We use alternative words or phrases or adjective with mode or way: ã, X He came out coward, escaping through the back door. Å, om, he left as a coward oo, he left cowardly Å ¢ | we use some common adjectives as advisable in English of informal conversation, although some speakers consider This incorrect: They sell very cheap things in this market. In the US real and good informal English can be used instead of really and well: sheems a very nice girl. The team is going well this season. Use modifying, and adding information the most common use of advocates is to modify adjectives; Advance usually comes before the adjective: I thought that their answers were pretty good in general. Some advisers, for example, really, almost, quite, beautiful, can modify another adverse: the French team went out very well in the first round. Some advances, for example, enough, about, approximately, can also modify the following phrases of nouns, prepositional phrases and numbers: their news came as a shock and both in our school, about fifty students have telermon. A key usage of the ADVORATION is to add information about the time, form or place of an action or state described in a phrase: hit the ball with force and this time flew to The back of the network. Note that we can use substantive phrases (this time) and prepositional phrases (on the back of the network) as advisers. We can use advisements with how, so also sufficient etc.: their performance was so enthusiastic that the judges ignored their We lost the bargains because we are not coming from long enough some advisers are used in conversations to show the attitude of the speaker. Advanced Using Comparisons We can use Advisor in and superlatives, usually with more and more: In the lottery draw, red balls appear more often than yellow balls.
