Android current location name

Android: Where is my Droid can help you locate your phone if you lost in the sofa cushions, you left it in a cafeteria, or are going around the city to call some Nigerian princes. Where is My Droid (WMD) is a dual-function locator for your Android phone. If you moved your phone only in an immediate environment you can send a text message to your phone (or use your mobile provider's email to SMS) and WMD will increase the volume of your ringer to 100% and then ring for half a minute, a minute, or five minutes to help you locate it by ear. Three years ago we showed you how to send a text message by email to the six main carriers in... If your Android phone is out of ear, you can also send your phone and instead receive the GPS coordinates and a link to Google Maps that displays the location of your phone. The only negative side to the GPS makeups is that it requires the phone already have GPS enabled. If you want to use the GPS tracker in Where is My Droid you need to leave the GPS all the time. The default text messages for which the application listens are "Where's my droid" and "GPS my droid", you can change them to something more harmless like "Where do you in Zebediah Balthazar? There's a crossroads at 83 and Washington!" Visit the author's website at the link below to take a copy for your Android phone or sound off in comments with your favorite Android app. Want to try some other Android localization tools? Make sure to take a previously reviewed WaveSecure and iTag. Android/Windows Mobile/Symbian: If your phone disappears or is lifted, WaveSecure, currently... A lot of rhetoric these days is to hide your location from big companies like Facebook, Google and other advertising platforms. However, you may want to share your location for your friends and family for various reasons. Some families like to track each other for security reasons. You may want to send your friend your location so they can come to pick you up or find you. In any case, there are position sharing applications available. Here are the best location sharing apps for Android! Read more:10 best GPS apps for Android5 best find my phone apps and other methods too Facebook MessengerPrice: FreeFacebook Messenger is one of the different good messenger apps with integrated position sharing. The application must know your location for it, so it may not be a good option if you do not trust Facebook. Otherwise, it is actually quite easy. Just share your location and your friends can click on it and open a map. It is a nice feature for sharing a location quickly without leaving exposed to your friends or family. Of course, Facebook still knows so that it may not be the best option for some people. Price: Free / $2.99 per month / $16.99 per year / $25.99 once Find My Kids is a parental control application to help parents track their children's location. You can see the children go and where they were. It works quite simply. The application opens and immediately displays the information at the best of its capabilities. There is also an integrated chat, various security controls, and you can monitor the baby's phone battery. You can choose from a single price or a subscription. The $25.99 license once works only on three phones at the same time though. Price: Free / $59.99 per year GeoZilla is a family locator app for everyone. It shows you where the children are and shows the children where you are. Parents can also check the location stories and the app has a chat function as well. It works pretty well even though it is a little basic. You can increase the experience with the company's GPS tracker, but it simply works well on the phone without the tracker. You can try it for free for three days before the $59.99 subscription per year kicks so as to make sure you test it thoroughly. Price: FreeGlympse is another location sharing service and is not half bad. Use its name as a verb for easier clarification. If you send a Glympse to someone and they see where you are. Of course, you can receive Glympses from others. This works as a location sharing app like most others. It also has the ability to create events so you can see where everyone is on the big day. Most complaints for this are intermittent connectivity issues. Make sure you have a good Internet connection or it may not work well. Price: FreeGoogle Maps are a sort of default option,the location sharing function is really good and it is probably the best alternative to apple finds my location sharing. just add your friends or family to your google contacts. from there opens google maps, touch the profile picture to the top right, and select the location sharing option. we like this option because you can set up for temporary or permanent access. Moreover, it is reasonably accurate. here is the official google tutorial in case you need to set up. read more:15 android app, never! 15 best free android apps, never!Life360Price: free / $4.99-$14.99 per monthlife360 is one of the most popular location sharing apps on mobile. It works cross platforming with ios so it is a good solution for families with devices of each ecosystem. the application offers real-time monitoring, alerts when people leave or arrive at destinations, and an integrated chat. the application has a few different subscriptions depending on what you want. There are some unique features, however, such as phone theft cover, crime reports, and other things. Most application complaints come from gps problems so make sure to test it thoroughly before committing to anything. my position gpsprice: free my gps location is a super simple location app. It just shows you where you are. the app includes latitude and longitudinal coordinates with altitude. you can share this information with anyone who wants it. this application seems designed for hikers and other activities that bring you beyondfrom civilization. So, we feel compelled to emphasize that you can't magically share things if you don't have a signal. Otherwise, it works as expected, although it is a little literal in its approach. Price: Most likely you know what Snapchat is and how it works. For the initiate, the application is a photo messaging platform where you send messages of people or videos instead of text messages (although text messages are also an option). The app includes an optional localization service. You can enable it and your friends can find you. There are some granular controls. For example, you can share with only specific friends or with all your friends. We recommend the first option only in case. Price: Free / Various Many mobile carriers have family localization services. We are sure that all four major carriers in the United States (T-Mobile, Verizon, AT&T and Sprint) have these kinds of features. It works basically the same way through the edge. You can enable the service for a nominal fee and then use the apps to view positions and do other things. Each has some fun features. For example, the T-Mobile variant has scheduled controls so you can get alerts throughout the day. It is recommended to ask directly to the carrier for details and prices. Most GPS applicationsPrice: Free (usually) Almost all GPS applications have a location-sharing function somehow. At least, such apps can share where you are in message format so that people can come to visit you. For example, if you are in a locality you can share the local McDonald location for others. Usually these applications are not all so efficient at the process, but if you do not need a real-time locator, your GPS could be a reasonably good answer and keep from the need for a second application completely. Those with Google Maps have in particular a two-bird solution, a stone. We have HERE Maps connected to the button below, but most GPS applications have at least basic sharing features.
