Filling for MP3. In a universe full of overvalued Internet stocks, MP3.com (MPPP) can be the most amazing story of all. The START-UP Web-Music offers songs that nobody wants through a technology that is not its own. Its market: Any boring enough to resonate through the offerings of more than 30,000 artists with the hope of finding the next Dion Celine. But wait, there's more. The main executives of MP3.com include Thomas Spiegel, who carried out a California savings and prÄ© STAMO makes a decanter, costing the taxpayers more than 1,000 million dollars, according to the regulators. Spiegel, obsessed with personal safety, built two anti-terrorist shelters at the headquarters of El Surban de Him. A 1990 Los Angeles Times reported that he had up to 19 private security officers Some armed with automatic weapons. MP3.com hired Spiegel in July. He is in charge of "strategic business opportunities." For all this, investors have rewarded MP3.com with a valuation of more than $3.5 billion. Even for an Internet Internet That the valuation is generous, approximately 50 times the projected income of MP3 2000. (Yes, that is income, not profits. Like most of the Internet companies, MP3 is not expected to be profitable for the foreseeable future.) As a comparison, the average trades of Internet shares about 20 times the expected income of the next year, according to Goldman Sachs. Dia de Reckoningpero The calculation day can be approaching MP3.com, facing increasing attacks on traditional disk companies and other music sites on the Internet. Last Tuesday advertisement than Seagram (VO) - Get Vanguard Mid-Cap ETF Report will open a real Internet music label, Jimmy and Doug's Parz Club, it's just the first shot on the next battle between the disc companies Traditional to resume Internet. (From the advertisement of Seagram, the Action of MP3.com has fallen just over 50 out of 60. THREEETE.COM wrote about the advertisement of Seagram.) Meanwhile, mp3.com must fight for consumer care with New START-UPS Web like Launch Media (Laun), which has news and songs from artists established at its launch site.com. "The majority of music consumers want music that they already know they like," says Dave Goldberg, executive director of Launch. "What is MP3 doing? Basically they are making available to non-signing artists, that's pretty easy to replicate, the most important question is, consumers they care?" To be sure, Goldberg has his own bias himself, since he is at stake the future of his company in working closely with the main labels. But independent analysts of the industry coincide with the evaluation of it. "I do not see anything that Mp3.com has or has built that protects it from the most recognizable music of people we know and trust," says Mark Hardie, Senior analyst that covers entertainment for Research, the technology consulting firm, which as a policy will not reveal whether it has consulted the companies mentioned in this story. With its wide variety of bands, MP3.com is a "fleet market" for music, Hardie says. "But a flea market is not where where people buy regularly.... In discussions around the music industry, I think there is very little support for the MP3 model as the future of the music business." Three other independent analysts echoed that view, but asked not to identify them. In fact, very few people who visit MP3.com buy music from the site. In October, for example, some 470,000 people visited the MP3.com site on a certain day, according to the company's figures, but the company sold only 18,300 CDs throughout the month, or only 600 a day. In other words, just one in a thousand people found music worth buying at MP3.com. In addition, while the number of unique visitors to MP3.com continues to increase, the number of pages that each person sees per visit has decreased from 6.7 in July to 5.6 in October. That fall is more proof that MP3.com is having a difficult time keeping visitors interested in their offers. So what is the long-term plan of MP3.com? The company doesn't say so. After repeated requests for an interview for this story, MP3.com responded that only president and executive director Michael Robertson could speak on behalf of the company and that Robertson had no time to comment. Analysts on the sales side following MP3.com, all of whom work for the investment banks that signed the company's July offer, did not return requests for comments. But their research reports minimize the importance of MP3.com music sales to their overall income growth. Credit Suisse First Boston estimates that only 7% of MP3 revenues next year will come from sales on your site, and the rest will come from advertising, both online and on musical tours that MP3.com is sponsoring. That income division makes it clear that despite your talk of revolutionizing the businessMp3.com is really not selling music to consumers. It is selling eyeballs to advertisers. Unfortunately, without good music, ocular balloons can soon be difficult to find. AS at the HOLESTILL, MP3 has a great AS under the sleeve: a rich agreement of Arnault, a private French investment company that controls the luxury conglomerate LVMH Moët Hennessy Louis Vuitton (LVMHY) . Arnault will spend $150 million over the next three years on advertising, marketing and promotion services for MP3.com. In addition, the agreement is established for MP3.com to obtain $5 million this year, $40 million in 2000, $70 million in 2001 and $35 million in the first half of 2002. That structure means MP3.com, which had only $6.5 million in revenue in the first nine months of this year, is guaranteed to see its revenue in soar for the next two years. In fact, based on analytics estimates, it seems that the Arnault agreement will represent approximately half of the total MP3.com revenues in the next two years. Arnault, which has set up a $550 million investment fund called Europ@Web to invest on the Internet, also agreed to buy about 3.3 million shares of MP3 to 28 stocks when the stock was public in July, an investment of $92 million that so far is solid in black. On Tuesday the TKTk deposit. Groupe Arnault does not publicly discuss its Internet investments or strategy, but a person in the company says that it considers MP3.com as "a unique marketing opportunity that could work not only for companies under the LVMH umbrella, but also for some of the companies that Groupe Arnault has invested. ... We believe in the concept and overall approach that MP3.com is taking." They don't have much company. And long before the Arnault agreement expires in 2002, music can be stopped for MP3. MP3.
